Before I let thy future give, Color and form to mine-Before I peril all for thee, Question thy soul to night for me. I break all slighter bonds, nor feel

One shadow of regret; Is there one link within the past That holds thy spirit yet? Or is thy faith as fair and free As that which I can pledge to thee?

Look deeper still. If thou canst feel Within thy inmost soul, That thou hast kept a portion back, While I have asked the whole, Let no false pity spare the blow

But in true pity teil meso. Is there within thy heart a need That mine cannot fulfill? One chord that any other hand Could better wake or still? Speak now, lest at some future day, My whole life wither and decay.

JERROLD'S WIT.

"Douglas Jerrold's Wit," just published in a neat volume by Ticknor & Fields, improves upon every fresh reading, though there is considerable in it which is not wiser nor wittier than other people have written .-Some of his illustrations are excellent. Take this, for instance, and we need not go to a cabinet minister to find specimens of the bear: "It occasionally happens that the bear afloat on an iceberg drifts into a warmer lattitude than the latitude of eternal frost, and as the iceberg melts under the increasing heat the bear shifts and shifts, finding his footing passing from beneath him, and at length howls piteously, to know the dissolution of the iceberg must in time occur. We would not compare a minister of State to a polar bear; nevertheless, even a chancellor of the exchequer, as be finds Parliament melting and a dissolution inevitable, will sometimes change his music." Here is a story which is exceedingly funny; too humorous some think to be Jerrold's own

"We have heard of a man, reasonable in all other matters, who declared that he had been ruined, all his vast property swallowed, by an earthquake. But when asked by strangers, What earthquake—and where?" the ruined man, with a deeper look of injury upon him, would reply confidentially, 'That's it, that's just it. That earthquake, sir, was most shamefully hushed up. This is good, about the Jacobite and the whig who quarreled, and when one of them cried out, "I spit upon your king William," and other, "I spit upon your king James the the Second." Jerrold rang the bell and shouted, "Waiter! spittoons for two!" So is his reason for the "fall." "Eve," Jerrold said, "ate the apple that she might dress." What is better than this? The British Government have bestowed upon Dr. Jas. Wynne the great Gold Medal of that country, as a mark of their high appreciation of his scientific labors. This is, we believe, the first instance in which this medal has been awarded to an American citizen for scientific ability. ENBERG'S,
